You Are Worth More Than You Think!

In this document I'm going to illustrate how, when you make a payment, you create a chain of events that must all be balanced out. This is almost certainly not happening with your own bank account and therefore you are losing out on what is rightfully yours.

Firstly, you need to understand how modern banking/commerce is done.

All nations are bankrupt – i.e., none of their money is backed by anything, so they are trading based on your potential. When we are born and our birth is registered, the state borrows based on our energy and its worth to the state over our lifetime.

This makes us the creators of the state's wealth. Each one of us is worth money to the state, and the state borrows using us as its collateral.

When financial institutions trade, they use promissory notes, otherwise known as securities, not actual money as we think of it.

To see an example of this, just look at any bank note which all contain the words, 'I promise to pay the bearer on demand the sum of ...'

This is one example of a 'security' – others include cheques, electronic payments, bank transfers etc. The banks trade with these as their assets.

Remember I said earlier that we are the creators of the state's wealth? Simply by being born, you created an asset for the state, and they trade on that asset. Because you created it, you own it. Because you own it, you have the right to reclaim it.

Whenever you pay money out of your account, it goes on a financial merry-go-round, and eventually ends up on the top of the international financial pyramid. You are entitled to claim it back from the top of the pyramid, because you, as the creator, own it.

If you don't claim it back, it becomes unclaimed salvage, and your bank will claim it back instead.

This is a very high-level overview of the situation, and it's only one small part of what my partners at Matrix Freedom do. To understand the thinking behind it, and to learn about all the other things they can do for you, visit their platform which has a wealth of information.
